

When life takes unexpected turns, the gift of support can make all the difference. If you're a food and beverage service employee with children, CORE can help. CORE grants support to families, with children, of food and beverage service employees navigating a medical crisis or the impact of a natural disaster. CORE is a nationally recognized community of support for all food and beverage service employees with children, providing financial assistance when families are overwhelmed navigating these circumstances.

WHY IS CORE SO IMPORTANT?

Many Americans are not financially prepared for unexpected expenses. This is also true for food and beverage operations employees with children.

Expenses due to illness, death and even natural disasters can cause Financial Toxicity¹, a term used to describe the toxic stress placed on patients when they must also deal with the financial hardship associated with an illness or crisis situation.

CORE steps in to help bridge the gap for restaurant and beverage employees facing these difficult obstacles, providing peace of mind and helping them breathe a little easier.

"When I got the call about our grant I was on a walk, and I just sat down and started crying. What CORE did—supporting our rent, groceries and immediate needs—I can't even put it into words."

- Nora F., restaurant employee impacted by the Nashville tornado (March 2020)

"CORE took a huge burden off of our shoulders during an unprecedented time of health and financial stress. Allowing us to focus on family and keeping my body trending in a healthy direction."

> Kyle D., restaurant employee with a young son unable to work due to autoimmune disease
